Access to physical rehabilitation services

Claude Tardif
Head of Physical Rehabilitation Programme
ctardif@icrc.org
That the services exist

• And more specifically:
  ▶ that services are available
  ▶ that services are develop within a national framework
  ▶ that service providers offers full range of services

That the services exist

• And more specifically:
  ▶ that services are open to all, without any sort of discrimination
  ▶ that services are developed to ensure long-term functioning
That the services reach the potential service users and answer their needs

• And more specifically:

• that all persons who need the services, know about the services and how to access it

• that providers develop services in line with service users needs

That the services reach the potential service users and answer their needs

• And more specifically:

• that services are decentralized

• that services are provided at community level
That the services reach the potential service users and answer their needs

• And more specifically:
  • that services are adapted to the social / cultural context
  • that PR services develop close contact with other service providers within the rehabilitation chain

That all service users can reach the services

• And more specifically:
  • services are affordable without compromising on the quality
  • that service providers facilities are accessible
That all service users can reach the services

• And more specifically:

• that services providers develop a referral network

• that transport and accommodation are available and affordable

Conclusion

• While accessibility to physical rehabilitation services implies several issues, the three main issues are:

  ▶ Services must exist and must address the needs of all potential users
  ▶ Services must reach all potential service users and must answer their needs
  ▶ All potential service users must be able to reach the services
Thank you!