Conventional Weapons Which May Be Declared to Be Excessively Lethal or to Have Indiscriminate Effects.

Conventional weapons, as defined in the Convention on Certain Conventional Weapons on the Use of Mines and Other Demolition Devices, are defined as those that are intended to cause death or injury to humans, which are not directed to property alone. The use of such weapons is prohibited by the Convention on the Prohibition of the Use, Stockpiling, Production and Transfer of Anti-Personnel Mines and on Their Destruction. The Convention, which entered into force on 11 June 1997, binds States Parties to destroy all anti-personnel mines and other devices that may cause death or injury to humans or to property alone.
